

GDPR is real. GDPR is happening. GDPR needs YOU.
Be ready for May 2018.

1 The new law

is going to affect every single organisation no matter how large, or small. Key decision makers need to be aware that the law is changing to GDPR and the impact this is likely to have.

2 Planning GDPR

compliance now is essential for gaining support from key people within your organisation. There is a lot of guidance to work through to ensure compliance requirements are met.

3 The ICO is working closely with trade associations and bodies representing the various sectors. Also working with these bodies will assist in gaining and sharing knowledge about GDPR implementation within your sector.

4 Data controllers must document and demonstrate their data accountability. Procedures must deal with GDPR's new transparency and individuals' rights provisions. This could have budgetary, governance, IT and communications implications.

5 The lawful basis

for processing personal data will need to be identified and privacy notices will need to reflect this. You will need to be able to explain your lawful basis for processing the data, your data retention periods and the individual's right to complain.

6 The Government has provided the ICO with significant investment and organisations found to be non-compliant with GDPR could face hefty fines. Appointing a Data Protection Officer to oversee GDPR implementation is advisable and in some cases, obligatory.

The above is just a flavour of what's involved. To find out more, you are invited to a free GDPR Client Information Day on:

Thursday 30th November at The ICC in Birmingham
